Calcareous sand is widespread on the coral reefs of Nansha Islands, South China Sea. It represents a special soil type due to its compressibility which results from high void ratio sediments and crushable particles.

Engineering characteristics of the calcareous sand in Calcareous sand, widely spread on coral reefs in Nansha Islands, South China Sea, will be used as backfill material in oceanic engineering, but its engineering property is still elusive.

Engineering characteristics of calcareous soils are more peculiar due to the grain geometries, hardness and intraparticle voids. In the fringing reef in Sanya, calcareous soils were mixed with some terrestrial deposits, such as quartz sand and clay.

A Comparative Study of Pile Foundations in Coral Formations

This is particularly true for calcareous sediments, as very little performance data exist for this anchor type in these soils. This paper reports results from a series of model tests undertaken to provide insight into the behaviour of a torpedo anchor during dynamic installation and monotonic pullout in lightly overconsolidated calcareous silt. The tests were carried out in a beam centrifuge ...
