When Yellowstone National Park was created in 1872, gray wolf (Canis lupus) populations were already in decline in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho. [citation needed] The creation of the national park did not provide protection for wolves or other predators, and government predator control programs in the first decades of the 1900s essentially helped ...

In 1995-1996 the gray wolf was reintroduced to Yellowstone National Park after it had been hunted to extinction some 70 years earlier. Now, 15 years later, a new ecological balance is gradually forming between a stable number of wolves and a less dominant elk population of which many plants and animals profit.
